Altho the Turkish siege of Varna was repelled in 1529, the Ottoman presence in Hungary continued to threat the Holy Roman Empire. Charles V needed a united front against the Muslim threat and at the DIET of AUGSBURG in 1530, he was eager to end religious divisions that had arisen in Germany and to make peace between the Protestant princes of the Roman Church. At his request the Protestant princes prepared a statement of their position (The Augsburg Confession) drawn up chiefly by Lutheran Theologian Philip MELANCHTHON (Luther was still outlawed and banned from the diet). The purpose was reconciliation. It stressed points of similarity between Catholic & Protestant. But the reply of Roman theologians (The Confutatio) stressed points of contention. The Protestant princes withdrew and the emperor confirmed the Edict of Worms & threatened military action if the reformers did not return to the fold by April 1531. Protestantism remained condemned. The result was to invigorate Protestant organization.
